School Lunch Goes Mobile by Dairy Council of California

The following success story was featured in the February edition of the Smarter Lunchrooms Movement of California Monthly Nudge.

What do you do when students don't buy lunch because cafeteria lines are long? Take lunch on the road! Donnelle Frost, Food Services Supervisor, was looking for a new way to serve reimbursable meals to students at Clovis West High School in Clovis, CA. Cafeteria lunch lines were long and the additional snack bar wasn't attracting students who hang out in the quad during their lunch break. In order to better serve the students and shorten the cafeteria lines, Ms. Frost experimented with serving reimbursable meals from a serving cart called Cruising Café. Located outside the cafeteria and in close proximity to students socializing in the quad, the cart now provides about 100 reimbursable lunches per day. It has been a great solution for students who wanted a meal, but weren't willing to wait in long cafeteria lines. Phoebe Copp, Dairy Council of California, Community Nutrition Adviser and Smarter Lunchrooms TAP's provider, asked a student why he chooses lunch from Cruising Café, the mobile lunch cart. He replied, "I don't like to go inside the cafeteria, and don't want to walk all the way over to the snack bar. This works for me!" By making lunch easily accessible, the mobile cart has increased reimbursable meal sales, provides a balanced meal and makes healthy eating easier for students.

UC CalFresh in Action!

Congratulations to Lake Tahoe Unified—Sierra House Elementary School, FUTP60 Award, UCCE Central Sierra

Congrats to Lake Tahoe Unified—Sierra House Elementary School who was awarded funds from Fuel Up to Play 60 in order to further implement their fitness and nutrition goals. A staff member from Sierra House Elementary writes, "Funding from Fuel Up to Play 60 provides a unique opportunity to combine the two main focuses of our school—fitness and nutrition. Using our growing domes and school garden to teach garden based nutrition provided by UC CalFresh, has now extended beyond just 'growing food'. Using the food we grow in the domes to create healthy smoothies for our students to drink after a PE/nutrition lesson links health, fitness and nutrition in a hands on way that we believe will impact our school community in a positive and empowering way. UC CalFresh Nutrition Education Program has been a strong partner in providing guidance and resources for our lunchroom, garden space and garden based nutrition curriculum."

Up to $4,000 per year is available to qualified K-12 schools enrolled in Fuel Up to Play 60 to kick start healthy changes. The next round of applications opens in Spring 2016. Check out how you can start preparing your application on the Fuel Up to Play 60 website here.

UC Delivers

This is a friendly reminder that counties should contact Andra Nicoli (amnicoli@ucdavis.edu) at the State Office if you are interested in developing a UC Delivers or have recently submitted a UC Delivers without State Office involvement. For those developing a UC Delivers, Andra can assist you in writing/editing/submitting a UC Delivers story. The State Office is also interested in keeping track of UC Delivers that are being submitted directly from counties. For those not requiring writing/editing services from the State Office, please share a copy of your submission with Andra. In this way, we can track the type of stories UC CalFresh is submitting and advocate for your story!

Is more physical education at school linked to higher student math scores?

The amount of time students spend doing physical activity in school appears to be linked to higher standardized math scores in D.C. schools, according to a new American University study that examined the success of the city's Healthy Schools Act and found that schools offering more physical activity had significantly better math success. The law, passed in 2010, requires D.C. public and public charter schools to adhere to requirements for what food must be served and how much physical activity should be built into each school week. The schools received funding as part of the legislation and were required to report how they implemented the program. "This finding demonstrates that students' academic performance improves when there's a balance between time spent on physical education and time spent on learning," said Stacey Snelling, dean of American University's School of Education. Since the Healthy Schools Act was passed, the District's schools have been required to incrementally increase the amount of physical education offered to elementary and middle school students each year. In the 2014-2015 school year, elementary school students should have received an average of at least 150 minutes per week, while middle school students should have received an average of at least 225 minutes. Schools across D.C. struggled to meet those targets for physical education, but those that provided about 90 minutes each week saw higher standardized math scores, according to the report. The study divided the city's elementary schools into four groups based on how much physical education they offered: the lower 25 percent, lower-middle 25 percent, upper-middle 25 percent, and upper 25 percent. The researchers then took the average DC CAS math proficiency score from the 2012-2013 school year for each of these four groups and found that schools offering more physical activity posted higher math scores. Some of the findings were also published in the academic journal Appetite. Read full article.

Funding Opportunity: Policies for Action: Policy and Law Research to Build a Culture of Health, Deadline: March 15, 2016, 3:00 PM EST

Policies for Action: Policy and Law Research to Build a Culture of Health (P4A) was created to help build an evidence base for policies that can lead to a Culture of Health. P4A seeks to engage long-standing health and health care researchers, as well as experts in fields like housing, education, transportation, and the built environment, to name a few, who have not worked in health before. The goal is to develop research that generates actionable evidence—the data and information that can guide legislators and other policymakers, public agencies, educators, advocates, community groups, and individuals. The research may examine established laws, regulations, and policies as well as potential new policies and approaches. The research funded under this call for proposals (CFP) should inform the significant gaps in our knowledge regarding what policies can serve as levers to improve population health and well-being, and achieve greater levels of health equity.
